NICE Guidelines

Use of intravaginal devices, such as Contrelle Activgard, is included in the latest NICE guidelines as part of a conservative approach to the treatments of stress and mixed urinary incontinence. NICE recognises the use of such devices could prevent more invasive options.

2

Proven Efficacy

Success of Contrelle has been demonstrated in six clinical trials with statistical significance, up to 95% of women reporting a benefit and 68% becoming completely dry. A recent study found 89% of women who have tried Contrelle expressed an improvement in quality of life. Clinical data shows no pH changes or effect on vaginal flora.

Helping get women back into exercise.

In a recent study, 90% of Contrelle users stated the device made them feel more confident during physical activity or exercise, leading to improvements in a range of exercise related health markers, providing NHS cost savings across multiple areas, and savings on pads and paper based hygiene products.
